Washington Requirements
Certification is available at both the state and national level for school nurses in the State of Washington.

State Certification
State of Washington's certificate awarded to qualified nurses (and also SLPs, OT/PTs, school psychologists and school counselors) by the Office of Superintendent of Public Instruction (OSPI) and governed by the State of Washington's Professional Educator Standards Board.

National Certification
National Certified School Nurse (NCSN) credential is provided by the National Board for Certification of School Nurses (NBCSN). Although NCSN is a mark of distinction, many school districts in the State of Washington do not compensate school nurses for having this. SNOW took an informal survey in May of 2014 to get an idea of which Washington school districts were compensating school nurses for the NCSN credential. Read those results here. SNOW encourages and supports national certification by having a NCSN Liaison on the Board of Directors and SNOW awards yearly scholarships for members that can be applied to the national certification fees.
